

Peter L. Rumpel, FAIA is an award winning architect who has been practicing in Jacksonville since 1968. He has also been an adjunct professor and distinguished lecturer at the University of Florida Department of Architecture. Outside of architecture Peter is an accomplished artist in the fields of painting, sculpture, and computer art having shown his work at multiple galleries and universities throughout the state. He has also been commissioned for large public art installations including Cancer Survivors Park and Ed Austin Regional Park sculpture. There has been a consistent interest in images developed from our local environment, whether its plant, animal or abstract ideas incorporated as ongoing images in all of his art. His late work shows an interest in working with digital media and how it can be transcribed into industrial processes such as water jet technology. His art conveys a sense of humor in a serious yet whimsical manner that can be appreciated and understood by the viewer.
